

Oxford Street East Cycleway

Community update

December 2023

Transport for NSW acknowledges the Gadigal people of the Eora Nation, the Traditional Custodians of the land on which this project is located.

Delivering the cycleway

Transport for NSW is proposing a new cycleway, separated from vehicles, on Oxford Street between Taylor Square and the entrance to Centennial Park, known as Paddington Gates.

The Oxford Street East Cycleway will encourage more people to make safe, healthy, sustainable, accessible and integrated active transport journeys, while supporting the rejuvenation of Oxford Street.

The cycleway will form part of a continuous, separated cycleway corridor between the Eastern Suburbs and Sydney's Central Business District, helping more people to ride their bikes safely as part of their everyday travel.

It will connect to new cycleways on Liverpool and Oxford streets, at Taylor Square. These are being delivered by the City of Sydney and are jointly funded by Transport for NSW.

Thank you for your feedback

In June 2023 we began further public consultation about the cycleway and we have spent hundreds of hours engaging with the community about the project. This included three pop-up information sessions and door-knocking businesses along the proposed route. We received a very large response, including over 2,000 submissions.

We thank everyone who took the time to give us feedback about the project. We've carefully considered all of it and prepared an Oxford Street East Cycleway Consultation Report. This provides an overview of what we heard and gives our responses to frequently raised topics.

Next steps

For more information about the project, the outcome of our public consultation and next steps, please see the Oxford Street East Cycleway Consultation Report.
